

This book, theoretically and methodologically represents a significant scientific contribution to the study of gender identity and rural women in Croatia. In addition to its conceptual clarity, rich content, sound conclusions and broad literature, this work represents an excellent example of qualitative research, interpretive and humanistic anthropology as well as reflexive ethnography. Undisputedly, this book will be used by a wide range of experts, from researchers and university teachers to politicians and will be essential reading for students of the social sciences and humanities.

- Professor Vedrana Spajić-Vrkaš, University of Zagreb

In this book, Lynette Šikić-Mičanović successfully and methodically carries out research and formulates recommendations for public policy based on her research findings. An active social role as well as meticulous fieldwork has resulted in a study that will definitely become part of reading lists in courses that deal with qualitative approaches in the social sciences and humanities in Croatia.
