

Acknowledgements

---

There are far more people who have contributed to this book, often unwittingly, so it is somewhat difficult to thank each of them individually. First, I would like to thank many of my colleagues and friends at the Ivo Pilar Institute of Social Sciences who have supported my work. In particular, Maja Štambuk who as my supervisor of two national research projects ‘Odnos selo-grad u hrvatskom društvu u postmodernoj perspektivi’ (2001–2005) [The urban-rural relation in Croatian society in a postmodern perspective] and ‘Društvena re/konstrukcija na ruralnom teritoriju: razvojna samoodrživost’ (2007–2013) [Social re/construction in rural territories: developmental sustainability] has supported and encouraged my research and writing for quite some time. Many thanks to Mirjana Paić-Jurinić, whose support, encouragement and work as editor, particularly for the Croatian version of this book was invaluable. I also would like to thank other scholars abroad for their intellectual support, helpful comments and encouragement. These include: Berit Brandth, Ildiko Asztalos Morell, Anselma Gallinat, Peter Collins, Vered Amit, and Nila Ginger Hofman.

Special thanks also go to the reviewers of this book Prof. Dr. Inga Tomić-Koludrović and Prof. Dr. Vedrana Spajić-Vrkaš for their constructive comments and support.

Finally, many thanks are owed to the women (and men) who participated in this study and who generously gave their time to share their stories with me. Special thanks are extended to Josip Krunić who unselfishly devoted his time as well as knowledge to me in the field. I would also like to thank Gordana Obrovac who included me in her circle of friends and acquaintances during fieldwork. Indeed, no account of fieldwork would be complete without acknowledgement of the pivotal role that research participants play in the conduct of ethnographic research. In their honour, I hope that this book ‘fittingly’ reveals women's enormous contributions to rural families, households, and communities. I also hope that I have successfully managed to grasp and give voice to women's (and men's) everyday lives and experiences in an appropriate and dignified way. Since the anthropologist is immediately drawn into and caught up into the world of our research participants, accounts of their lives and cultures inevitably shape our attitudes towards them and towards ourselves. I assume full responsibility in my constructions and representations of my research participants and hope that I have not offended or misrepresented anyone in this study. Moreover, I hope that my presence and interactions in the field have had positive outcomes and has emboldened some women to challenge and undermine the existing gender relations that are detrimental to their well-being.

Many thanks to my family who have consistently supported me in my work, especially my husband, Miroslav Mićanović and my two sons, Stipan and Luka.

I thank the following publishers and journals for permission to use these or parts of these previously published articles:

- Foregrounding the Self in Fieldwork among Rural Women in Croatia. In: Peter Collins & Anselma Galinat (eds.), The Ethnographic Self as Resource: Writing Memory and Experience into Ethnography (2010), pp. 45-62, Oxford: Berghahn Books.
- Gendered Values and Attitudes among Rural Women in Croatia, Journal of Comparative Family Studies (Special issue): Family and Gender in the Transformation of the Countryside (2007), XXXVIII, 3: 459-476.
- The Meanings and Experiences of Domestic Labour among Rural Women in Croatia, Eastern European Countryside (2011), 17: 87-106.
- Women's Contribution to Rural Development in Croatia: Roles, Participation and Obstacles, Eastern European Countryside (2009), 15: 75-90.