

Pilar Journal - INSTRUCTIONS TO AUTHORS (CONTRIBUTORS)

The citation method is adapted to the fact that Pilar is an interdisciplinary journal that covers scientific production in the fields of both social sciences and humanities. Since almost every science in these fields usually uses a different way of citing sources when writing scientific papers, in the journal Pilar we allow two ways of citing, which at least to some extent unify these differences. In doing so, the author must consistently stick to the way of citing that he or she once accepts.

1. NOTES AT THE BOTTOM OF THE PAGE (FOOTNOTES)

Sources, literature, and notes related to the text are listed in the notes at the bottom of the page. In the notes, sources and literature are listed in abbreviated form, and complete information about the works cited can be found in the bibliography at the end of the paper.

2. NOTES WITHIN THE TEXT

References to sources or literature used are given in the text itself, and notes related to the text are given in the notes at the bottom of the page. References to sources or literature used within the text must include the surname of the author whose book/article/publication is used or cited, the year of publication of the book/article/publication, and possibly the page number if the original text from the book/article/publication is cited. Full information on the works used or cited can be found in the list of literature at the end of the article.

When there is one author:

- Note: "Liberalism tears the individual out of the organic body of society and enables him to live, at least for the greater part of his life, outside the mother's womb, throwing him into an unknown world full of danger, where there is a struggle for survival." (Bobbio, 1992, p. 52).
- Or: Bobbio (1992) believes that "liberalism tears the individual out of the organic body of society..." (p. 52).
- List of literature: Bobbio, N. (1992). Liberalism and democracy. Zagreb: Novi Liber.

When there are two or three authors:

- Note: Last year, a detailed analysis of the impact of transport accessibility on the change in the number of inhabitants and the aging of the population in Međimurje County was published (Turk, Mesarić Žabčić and Šimunić, 2022).
- References: Turk, I., Mesarić Žabčić, R., Šimunić, N. (2022). The impact of transport accessibility on population change and population aging in Međimurje County from 1991 to 2021. Podravina, XXI (42), 168-181.

When there are four or more authors (add »et al.«):

- Note: In their analysis of environmental change in the central part of the Dalmatian hinterland, Fuerst-Bjeliš et al. (2011) stated...
- References: Fuerst-Bjeliš, B., Lozić, S., Cvitanović, M., Durbešić, A. (2011). Environmental changes in the central part of the Dalmatian hinterland since the 18th century. In: Zagora between the livestock-farming tradition and the process of littoralization and globalization. Zadar, Dugopolje: University of Zadar, Cultural Assembly of Zagore, Branch of Matica hrvatska in Split, 117-129.

When citing multiple works at once:

- Note: Several authors have written about right-wing nationalism as a Croatian national ideology (Gross, 1962, 1964, 1973; Matković, 2001; Turkalj, 2009).
- Note: If two or more works by the same author are cited, only the first one needs to be accompanied by the surname.

When using works by the same author published in the same year:

The year of publication is followed by a lowercase letter a, b, c..., which is explained in the bibliography:

• Note: In the years when it grew into a national movement (Turkalj, 2009a), right-wing nationalism also gained supporters among Croatian women (Turkalj, 2009b).

• Bibliography:
